

I see no reason for the FCC to do anything with the Indiana law on telephone privacy. I would appreciate them leaving the law as is. Since the law has been in effect I am not constantly getting phone calls at all hours of the day and night from solicitors that I do not care to talk too. I do not have too put up with the pressure tactics that the telemarketers use and their constant calling back. Please leave the law as is, do not change it. I cannot believe that this is even being considered, as I am sure I am not the only one who feels this way. I wonder does any of these people on the FCC have phones?
